The United Kingdom is home to many fine panels of rock carvings in the Atlantic Europe tradition, particularly the many cup and ring sites and amazing arrays of cupules in Argyll and Northumbria. Last summer, SDRAA Webmaster Ken Hedges and his wife, Diane Hamann, embarked on a month-long journey through England, Wales, and Scotland, working from a broad definition of “rock art” (very broad, indeed) in search of classic panels and beyond. From standing stones and stone circles to lofty cathedrals, Medieval castles, and ancient monuments, rock art in surprising variety turns up in unexpected places. Join us in April for this journey around the United Kingdom, from the white cliffs of the south coast to the misty Orkney Islands far to the north in search of rock art both well known and unanticipated.

Ken Hedges is retired Curator of California Collections of the San Diego Museum of Man, where he co-founded the annual Rock Art Symposium in 1976 and edited the Rock Art Papers series. He is a founding member of the American Rock Art Research Association and SDRAA, currently serving as webmaster for both organizations. He has published over 100 papers, edited volumes, books, and reports on Native American rock art and related subjects.
